not pay the personal tax now. In that respect the law has not been changed. Another purpose of the personal tax law was to establish an equitable and uniform method of supporting the na-ifonal guard. Before the passage of this law the towns collected and turned in as much commutation tax as they were obliged to and no more. The result was that some towns con-iributed less than one per cent, of their inhabitants and others paid in three or four per cent. The grand list was selected because that afforded the most staple basis upon which to compute any common burden.
